Reformed Accounting

Duane Jackson grew up in a children’s home east London. “Then I took	1 the usual path,” says the 34-year-old, “to hanging around with the wrong	2 crowd.” He got the kicked out of school at 15 and, five years later, was	3 arrested in Atlanta, Georgia, for trafficking 6,500 ecstasy tablets. He served	4 two years in prison in UK. “On my release, I found it hard to get a job	5 because of this black hole on my CV,” says Jackson. “So I decided to start	6 my own company.” His startup currently employs some 40 people,	7 providing online accounting software for more than 2,000 startups. It’s	8 revenues are around £2 million.
Jackson tort himself to programme using a ZX Spectrum when he was at	8 the children’s home, and later taught IT skills to prison inmates. Then he came across the Prince’s Trust, a foundation that helps a young people	9 start their own businesses. “I started as a freelance web developer, but quickly realised that all the accounting software out there was over-complicated, full jargon and horrible to use,” he says. “So I decided to	10 make own software and sell it as a product.”	11
The Prince’s Trust provided a £4,000 grant, a connection that also led of	12 him to meet Lord Young, enterprise adviser to David Cameron, who invested in Jackson’s startup and now surves as its chairman. “Drug	13 dealing is very entrepreneurial,” says the Jackson. “But in prison, I realised	14
the cause and effect between your actions and where you end up.”
